The Role of the Powers

Both the Soviet Union and the United States have accused one another of altering positions previously adopted in respect to the Middle East. But the plain fact is that neither has changed fundamentally-and therefore peace in the Middle East is as remote as before the powere began their talks on the eublect.

Moscow adheres to the stand that Israel must abandon all territory occupied in 1967; that a de facto peace would begin with the withdrawal, with a de jure peace to follow the completion of this process. Israel has experienced a de facto cessation of hostilities and the abandonment of territories seized-which proved only an armed truce. It does not propose to pull back at all withont some guarantees of a genuine de jure peace, and apparently intende to hold on to some of the ground gained in 1967 in any

The United States may differ with Israel about the extent of immediate withdrewal, but it sympathizes with the Israeli demand that there be at least the beginnings of formal negotiations between the parties in interest as evidence that a de jure peace can be agreed upon in good faith. Consequently, it adheres to the Rhodes formula of negotiation through a UN intermediary, with some territorial matters as part of these negotiations.

This is the vital difference between the powers. The Soviet Union wants them to agree on a substantive settlement, in effoct, which would drive Israel back to its pre-1967 boundaries, without any diplomatic contacts between the parties in interest. Whether such a cottlement would be considered binding on the Arab governments, to say nothing of the intransigent and increasingly powerful Arab guerrilla movement, is questionable. There are strict limits upon the ability of any great power, or combination of great powers, to influence smaller states, and neither Israel nor the United States can have much confidence in the will of the Soviet Union to force such etates as, say, Syria or Iraq, to abide by conditions laid down for them.

The angry Israeli reaction to the concessions implied in the American plan indicates these limitations. It would eeem that the Soviet Union has prudently decided to avoid similar Arab reaction—even if Moscow has thereby nullified any hope that the powers could play an impartial and disinterested role in peace-making. The Soviet Union professes to want further discussions with the United States-but, apparently, only on its own, or on Arab terms. There are points of agreement between the two nations. But these are not really significant as long as the central division is so wide and so decisive.

inevitable end to a struggle that was unequal from the beginning and for a cause whose hopelessness has been apparent for many months. The surrender statement by Brig. Philip Effiong suggests that many in Biafra's leadership had long recognized that continued military resistance could only increase the already grievous losses of the Ibos and their allies; but it was not until Gen. Ojukwu had fled that the realists could take the needed action to end the war. Having led his people to disaster, Gen. Ojukwu did not add to his stature in history by fleeing at the last moment with his family and his white Mercedes.

It took the federal Nigerian forces two and a half years to put down the rebellion despite their vast superiority in manpower. military equipment and foreign aid. The Biafrans fought bravely and skillfully, endured hunger and disease on a massive scale coming the hardships of their isolated posietaggering losses reflected their own idealism, the obduracy of their leadership and, not least, the widespread conviction among many Ibos that to eurrender meant to die. To its shame, the British government played a major role in the Nigerian war. It kept up a supply of arms and financial assistance to Nigeria. And while this was going on, Barold Wilson himself went to Nigeria on a peace mission.

The actions of the British government were explained away by the "influence" it could have on the foderal Nigerian government. If this influence exists, Mr. Wilson must now use it to ensure that the ceasefire is a genuine one. Arms shipments must immediately give way to a massive airlift of food and medical supplies.

Jumbo Jet Era

The arrival of the 365-seat jumbo jet marks the opening of a new period in world aviation. By the end of the year about 70 in all are expected to be in service.

But the jumbo is only the first of a new generation of aircraft that are due to make their appearance within the next few years. All have been designed to meet the expected rapid growth of air travel.

Th airlines have committed themselves to this huge new investment at a time when their average return on capital enjoyed is already low. The jumbo jets are intrinsically cheap to operate provided they are reasonably full: but it is conceivable that the first effect of their introduction, as when lets replaced piston-engined aircraft, may of be a surplus of carrying capacity. The center of the Middle East conflict is situated at the very heart of the great regions where are found the most important oil reserves in the world, and it is also for oil reservee discovered under the soil that Nigeria and Blafra have been fighting for the past two years. All this oil gives to the arguments by which one pretends to justify intervention or abstention a certain odor which is not that of total good faith.

CANTON, Miss.—On a wall-sized photographic map in his office, school superintendent Lamar Fortenberry pointed to the city'e five public schools, and with his finger traced tha contrasting attendance zones proposed by the local board and by HEW experts.

HEW's plan is mathematically nest. The town's black population is concentrated on the west side. HEW proposed an attendance line that sliced horizontally through the city, leaving the school population about 70 percent black and 30 percent white on each side. The local hoard proposed a north-south line that would have resulted in about a third of the black pupils attend-ing predominantly white schools, and about 10 personnt of the whites in schools with black majorities.

After the Supreme Court ruled out any further integration delay in 30 Mississippi districts, the Fifth adopted. The other was found to retain too many vestiges of a dual racial system. It does little good to talk of what might have been. If school officials had accepted the Supreme Court'e 1954 desegregation ruling in good faith, and racist politicians had not interfered, schools would long since have been integrated, even at the pace of one grade a year, and the statistically demonstrable education gap between black and white children in the South would not exist.

Nor, after 15 years, can a convincing legal argument be made for further delay. The Supreme Court could hardly have ruled other than it did in its Oct. 39 "Integrate now" order. The Nixon administration, by forcing the issue, only exacerbated a problem it was trying to diminish.

Nor could NAACP Legal Defense Fund lewyers and other civil rights stalwarts have failed to challenge the administration's footdragging. They have lived so long with "one more year" that they stand in danger of losing their constituents' faith—and perhaps their own—in the judicial system. A Regular Army colonel recently dubbed the Pacific Stars and Stripes the "Hanoi Herald" because it printed an account of an infantry com-pany hard hit by the Viet Cong and forced to pull back.

The coionel represented a commonly held view. It is that military news organs should never interfere with military "morale," a word eubject to personal interpretation. None of this, to put it mildly, is calculated to help Nixon make Vietnamization palatable for long to the American public. To his critics, it suggests the futility of the policy as a means of putting a speedy end to the war. To anti-Communist supporters, it is bound te suggest that any genuine withdrawal policy will only turn over South Vietnam to Communism.

Former President Johnson shed some light on that incongruity in his fascinating television conversation with Waiter Cronkite. Johnson gave presidential confirmation to what had been suggested by others —that in the fall of 1968, Thieu delayed a halt to the American bombing of North Vietnam and the consequent expansion of the Paris peace conference, in an effort to help Nixon defeat Hubert Humphrey in the presidential election.

In a speech in Salt Lake City,
Humphrey had suggested "a shift

That suggests the bitter truththat having created and then sus-tained the Thieu government, having made it in the Johnson administration the instrument of the "freedom and self-determination" for which the nation was supposed to be fighting, and in the Nixon administration the linchpin of the "Vietnamization" by which the war is supposed to be ended. India to Buy U.S. Planes For Airline

Russia Is Outbid In Two-Year Sale

NEW DELHI, Jan. 13 (NYT).in an East-West competition, Americans have outbid Russians in the sale of passenger planes to India for its domestic airline.

The Indian government took two years to make up its mind on the American plane, the Boeing-737, by which time the price of the plane had gone up by 10 percent. Much of the delay was caused by government wavering in the face of Soviet pressure on behalf of the Tu-154, a new and largely unproved plane.

The decision was further complicated by an alleged bribe offer gunned down men, women and of the Douglas Aircraft Co. to win acceptance of the DC-9, a plane that was at one stage favored by the government.

A Continuation

"Le Pain Dur" continues the story of Turelure, a servant elevated to high rank by the social changes brought by the French Revolution. As aly and wily as Fouche, Turchire is ever ready to alter his opinions and allegiances to suit the powers that be. Here, he reappears as a minister of Louis-Philippe, the bourgeois king. But despite his cunning, he meets his match in his own son, a creature as ruthless as his parent. In a violent dispute over money the son causes his father to suffer a fetal heart-attack. The parricide then marries his father's mistress, the enigmatic Jew,

The conflicts symbolize the spirit's war with crass materialism and the characters, despite their sordid acts, are lent a tragic grandeur in a play of mighty size and compelling power. There are flashes of sardonic wit, too, as when the threatened fether exclaims in his defense, "I'm a good Christian—like Voltaire"

The director, Jean-Marie Serreau, has accomplished a noble theatrical feat, bringing the strange drama into clear focus and according it constant vitality behind the footlights. Barenboim: A Daring Mai

By Henry Pleasants
I ONDON, Jan. 13.—Beethoven is the "in" composer this yes having been born in 1770—not that he has ever been "out" and it seems wonderfully appropriate that the bicentenary should be inaugurated here with the thirty-two piano sonatas played b Daniel Barenboim, who is indisputably London's most "in

He is, in fact, so "in" that grumbling is becoming audible, or at least legible. "There are times," wrote Desmond Shawe-Taylor in the Sunday Times last week, "when we feel that as conductor pianist, accompanist, festival organizer, non-stop recording artis, wall-publicized hneband of Jacqueline Du Pré, television star and so forth, he represents a kind of one-man takeover bid for the whole of English musical life."

An exaggeration, of course, in a musical community which pays such devoted homage to Benjamin Britten, Yehudi Menuhin and the Proms. But even if true, it would hardly be tragic; for Barenboim, at 27, is more than just an extraordinarily gifted musician and striking musical personality. He is a true European romantic, incorporating an approach to the 19th-century masters that many of us had feared lost with the passing of Busch, Furtwangler, Kleiber, Knapperisbusch and Walter, among the conductors, and of Backhaus.

Cortot, Fisher and Schnabel among the pianists.

There may he some justice in the complaint that Barenboin does too much, not in the sense that he is hogging the show, bu in the sense that his performance suffers. In terms of polis and finish it does. But, as he puts it, "What I learn abo: Beethoven as a conductor is grist to my mill as a planist, an vice-versa."

This is persuasively evident in his playing of the Beethove sonatas. It is conductorial playing, or orchestral, if you prefer often reflecting impatience—as Beethoven's playing did—with the limitations of something made of iron, wood and wire. But the is Beethoven vividly imagined and vividly realized, adventurous in its enterprise, often excessive in its coloration, contrasts an accentuations, daring to the point of recklessness in both versat and very slow episodes, careless of the occasional mishaper of the corresponding with Beethoven wi and at once relentless and poised in its communion with Bee

Barenboim knows all about that. There are better pianists around, and better conductor, too. But hardly a better musician, least of all when it comes t

Hair—It's Everywhere (Including Toronto)

By Clive Barnes

TORONTO, Jan. 13 (NYT).— Who would have dreamed it.up? "Hair" in Toronto! But Toronto is no longer the congervative city of good, gray British imperialism it once was, It has a film, for example, Allan King's "A Married Cou-ple," which is yet to be seen in New York, but is quite simply one of the greatest movies I have ever seen in my life. And now, at the charming Royal Alexandra Theather, Toronto has "Hair," And this "Hair" is one of the hairlest.

I have seen "Hair", in New York, London, Paris and now Toronto. I almost feel a member (even if a highly critical member) of the tribe, various productions, including those in Los Angeles, Copenhagen, Amsterdam, Chicago, Zagret and Tokyo, which I planned, such as that in Manchester, England, is that each and everyone of them is individual. This is a new way of show production, and the point has perhaps not yet been noted.

In the past the practice of marketing Broadway shows has been to produce a "National Company," a facsimile of the Broadway original that tried so far as possible, to reproduce the original New York production. It was at very best an imitation and at very worst a phoney fake. "Hair" is difphoney fake. "Hair" is dif-ferent. Each "Hair" is new, different and original.

Toronto has one of the best "Hair" productions I have seen. Interestingly, it is the very first to be staged by the authors, Gerome Ragni and James Rado. and they have given it with e certain new zest. Obviously they have based the work on Tom O'Horgan's great New York original, but they have felt free to change here and there, to bring their own freefall spontaneity to the piece, and to play around generally.

A New Number

They have put in at least one new number—the beautiful "So Sing the Children"—and many of the other introductions have been rewritten and freshly adapted. Some of the visual images in the new staging transcend, if only by develop-ment, O'Horgan's original, and while this new Canadian "Hair" is totally faithful to the original, it keeps its faith by being very often different, and once in a while outrageous. In every production of "Hair" I have seen, so far, you find your-self waiting for the "original cast recording." What greater tribute can you pay?

The Toronto production has tremendous vitality. The kids are fun, and they have a sharphoned spontaneity and engaging honesty. Everything here is slightly different from all other productions-yet, and this where it counts, essentially the same. The dances, staged by Julie Arenal, assisted here Nathalie Morosco, resemble all the uther "Hair" tribal dances, yet still have their own individuality and passion. Miss Arenal creates for people but not according to predestined pattern,

The evolution of "Hair" has been most interesting. Probably it opened as a kind of tourist excursion to a hippie world. See this, see "Hair"—thet is where all our crazy, mixed-up kids are Yet its qualities transcended its apparent function. The poetry of Ragni and Rado, the exquisitely effortless music of Galt MacDermot, who throws music into the air as if it were a cluster of colored balloous, all made a show that young people could identify with-and even some middle-aged people. "Hair" was mocked. But even the mockers could hum the musiceven the jeerers got the mes-

One of the nicest things about seeing "Hair" across the world is to see the goodwill it pro-motes and the talent it encourages. In this particular Toronto production the ensemble—the tribe—was outstanding, I did not think Kid Carson's Berger was as good as some—it had an oddly bureaucratic air to it, and while Clint Ryan's Claude was more effective, it too had its moments of Ryan's unaffected and wit Woof. Yet individual performance matter surprisingly little : "Hair." The show has its ow momentum, its own style, i own potentialities. This is when Ragni and Rado have bee most successful. They has given the Toronto "Hair" i own head of steam; its ow eloquence. If you have or thing to do in Toronto si "Hair." Just consider the a ternatives. Peace Canade, Lennon has but two themes himself and Mrs. Yoko Ono Lennon dressed and undressed. in the first going about their daily and evidently uninspiring and uninspired lives; in the second going about the business of making love. The lithographs sell for $96 each, $1,320 for the set of 14.

And who indeed, should know better about the lives of John and Yoko Ono than Lennon himself? So the theme is valid, it seems to me, but his lack of technique is not.

The smile returned. "Well then, the president has said that we have to keep wages down to fight inflation. The president has said that you have to work harder and increase production. The president says you cannot strike. So I'm afraid there isn't much we can do for you." Permiar Alliance The scene strikingly symbolizes some of the changes being produced by a peculiar al-liance between two giant foreign copper companies and a central African government confronted with overwhelming internal and

The alliance was forged when President Kenneth Kaunda "invited the two copper companies -which produce 700,000 tons of the strategic metal a year, making Zambia the world's third largest copper producerto sell the government 51 percent of their shares.

The companies are Roan Selection Trust, 80 percent U.S.owned, and Anglo-American, a South African firm. Together, their investments in Zambia run close to $1 billion, with Anglo being the larger of the

The government officially took over 51 percent of the copper mines this month after agreeing on a long-term payment of $290 million to the companies. Under ten-year agreements signed a few weeks ago, the companies will continue to manage the mines and market the copper and will receive fees for this. Profit Share?

These agreements appear to be the basis for widespread confidence among mining-company executives that the takeover will amount to little more than the government's sharing in 51 percent of the profits, at least in the near future.

Mr. Kaunda has entered his new role as a kind of national mine foreman with his usual intense moral fervor. Using a report on the Zambian economy prepared for him by a United Nations agency, he has been cajoling, threatening and berating the workers.

The report concludes that "labor discipline has broken down in Zambia." The average worker is producing 12 percent less than he was at the time of independence in 1964, the report asserts, whereas he should be producing 12 percent

Mr. Kaunda vowed to lift labor restrictions and halt the political pressure which had combined to prevent the mining companies from firing even slack Zambian workers: he also ordered that there would be a 5 percent ceiling on any wage increase and urged that increases be forgotten about for this year. But some observers here wouder how he will be able to balance this with his need to hold the political allegiance of a labor movement noted for its lack of

The other major new relationship to be worked out is that between the government and its new junior partners, Roan Selection Trust and Anglo-American.

The government this week names its representatives to the two boards of directors that will run the two new joint com-panies. On each board, the government will have six directors, the companies five. What the companies fear most is that Mr. Kaunda will use the board posi-tions as a method to get rid of political deadwood in his cabinet and party hierarchy.

"What we really want are six very busy men who won't have time to meddle," says one company official.

BLONDIE

By Alan Truscott

West led the heart seven and South won with the queen. He played two high trumps, revealing the bad trump break, and had to review the situation.

The right technique was to cash the queen of diamonds and lead a second diamond toward the dimmy. A three-two dismond break will make matters easy, for South can simply draw all the missing trumps. If West has a singleton diamond he is welcome to ruff, but as it happens it is East who shows out, South cannot, of course, make the donble-dummy play of finessing the eight in dummy. At this point the position is:

NORTH ♦ 97 ♥ 6. ♦ A84 ♣ Q5. EAST Ö KJ109

SOUTH 10973 ♦ QJ ♥ A4 ♦ 5 A AJ6 South knows that West has two more trumps and two more diamonds, He does not know the location of the club king, but that does not matter. He should lead to the heart are and play the heart four.

If West rutts with the space ten, a club is discarded from dummy. After a trump return, South can establish dummy's fifth diamond as his 12th trick, and a diamond return is no bet-

If West does not ruff the third heart lead, South ruffs in dummy and draws trump. He then plays diamonds, surrendering a trick to West, who must lead a club at the 12th trick.

BOOKS-

WESTWARD TO LAUGHTER By Colin MacInnes. Farrar, Straus & Giroux. 238 pp. 85

Reviewed by John Leonard

BEFORE WE'VE even had a chance to analyze and classify the fiction of Colin Mac-Innes, he confounds us with another book. Only a year ago,
MacIrnes's "London Novels"—
"Absolute Beginners," "City of Spades," "Mr. Love and Justice"—were published in this country for the first time, eliciting critical huzzahs not without the usual admixture of self-congratulation: "For too long the American public has ignored . . Why did it take ten years? . . etc.

They were good novels, with moral bite, sharply observed, genuinely amusing, steeped in that contemporary London underworld to which, with the emeption of Gerald Kersh. most British writers have been recently indifferent. Moreover, one of his principal concerns was the urban subculture of the hlack immigrant. Long before the fingering of racial wounds became popular on this side of the Atlantic, the white Mac-Innes had already managed remarkable imaginative acts of empathy and identification.

Now, precipitately, we have.

"Westward to Laughter." It is not about London. It is not, on the surface, about our modern condition. It is a philosophical romance set in the West Indies of the 1750s, full of such idiomatic conventions as, "even for cruel treachery, death seemed too big a price for foolish Horatio to pay! Far more than he was worth, it being so tremendous and he so paltry."

What is MacInnes up to, besides confounding the classi-flers? Something tricky: an equivalent of Mark Twain's ironic conversion of values, as in the celebrated scene when Huck Finn decides to "do wrong," to risk his soul by helping Jim against the strictures of conventional morality. Alexander Nairn, a young Scot out of the school of hard knox whose memoir "Westward to Laughter" purports to be, is part Huck Finn, part Candide. Unlike them, though, he doesn't live to the end of his story.

Caught on the wrong side of British politics, Natin is more or less impressed on a slave trader that sails from Bristol to the West Indian island of St. Laughter, where those Africans who survive the passage are anctioned off to the white planters. Nairn jumps ship, and thereafter it's the Perils of Pauline.

The story is a hoary one: Naim, through inadvertence, witnessing a murder; condemned to slavery; escaping with black rebels who also abduct a white planter's beautiful daugh-ter (bitchy she, as per convention, is never ravished, by black or Narm: luckless he is always ravished, by events: innocence is a terminal disease; serving time on a pirate ship; being hanged at age 19. Bookmaking's $50 Billion Bettor Business Administration

By Steve Cady

NEW YORK, Jan. 15 (NYT).—After two busy signals, the football fan got through on his phone call to Brooklyn.

"This is Al for Horse," he said. "What's the line on the Vikings? ... Okay, gimme the Vikings 20 times."

"You got it," the man at the other end of the line said, and hung up.

The caller had just done what millions of other Americans had been doing last week.
While a federal investigation into sports gambling erupted. Al had placed an illegal bet on the Super Bowl game between the Minnesota Vikings and Kansas City Chiefs.

Along with baseball's World Series and tac ing's Kentucky Derby, the Super Bowl'rates as one of the Big Three volume leaders in a yearround parade of sports events on which billions of dollars are wagered.
Some estimates put the annual total at $50

hillion, ten times more than is bet legally (and taxed by the states) at horse and dog tracks. As the nation's largest source of unrecorded (and imtaxed) cash, the gambling enterprise appeals both to bet-makers and bet-takers. For the bir synchostes, the revenue finances traditional operations in loan-sharking, prostitution, narcottes or, increasingly these days, in legitimate businesses such as fancy restaurants and resort hotels. It also generates the ready cash with which to bribe police and public

In the bookmaking department, most observers feel that horse racing runs a poor fifth— back of baseball, pro football, college football and college basketball, ahead of only pro basket-ball, hockey and boxing. Significantly, the sport with the greatest reputation for homesty, baseball, heads the list. As one all-sports better noted, "the books lost

Whatever else he may be the sensible bookmaker is a husinessman. He knows that his hierative business depends on two factors: (1) public trust in his willingness to pay off win-ners, and (2) his own trust in the integrity of the contests on which he accepts bets. The last thing the dedicated bookle wants to see is a race or game whose outcoms or point margin has been rigged: that is, a fix. Bookles can get hurt that way. Al's wager on the Vikings amounted to $100, or 20 standard units of $5, plus an additional $10 the 10 percent bookie commission known in the trade as vigorish. If Al had won, he would have made $100. Since he lost, he pays

At the answering-service headquarters where the call came in, a phone clerk jotted down the bet on a sheet of paper labeled Horse. Other bets would be recorded on sheets belonging to Camel or Jersey or 35, code names for the bookies whose "work" was being processed.

Horse and Camel and Jersey and 35 represent an increasingly dominant breed of bookmaker: the corporate specialist. Just as the chain supermarket has replaced the corner grocery store, Horse and his phone-conscious, cod colleagues are replacing the old-fashioned, small-time bookies who maintain a personal relationship with their customers.

The small-timers pound a regular beat: a few bars a few restaurants, a certain hotel, a certain flower shop. They employ no runners, are more lenient extending credit, often take less commission and buy drinks for their best customers. Their customers sometimes include the policeman who happens to be pounding the Small-time bookies tend to deal primarily in horse bets, take other sports action as a service to the horse players, have trouble balancing their non-horse action and often have to count on their baseball, football and basketball customers betting the wrong way. Horses are more lucrative. The rule-of-thumb percentage on horses is about one-third profit: If a bookie handles $300 a day in horse bets, he can expect to keep about $100. Ironically, he frequently bets some of it on horses himself.

Provided he doesn't try to get too hig, the established small-timer is usually left alone by

The corporate bookies, with their paid runners and clerks, deal only by phone. In recent years, the direct-dial system used by Al to place his bet on the Vikings has become less popular than the call-back system. In the safer call-back procedure, the bettor phones a third party (often a housewife carning extra money) The bookie's egent, checking his "answering service" from different pay stations, thus keeps a few steps ahead of the gambling squads.

A modest publication known as the "Ready Sheet" keeps the bets in the sports-gambling industry flowing smoothly. Delivered to clients by mail or messenger in time for Monday's action, it lists the sites and starting times of all the games on the card for the upcoming week. Four boxes beside each contest enable the better to fill in any changes in the point

A notice at the bottom of each "Ready Sheet" underscores the paradox of untaxed gambling: "All information and material in this publication is strictly for newsmatter, and not as an inducement to violate any laws.

The Laws of Tools

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON.—Tools follow very interesting laws. Consider the goost irritating of all, which is the tendency of tools to gather in houses where they will never have to work.

Let us assume, for illustrative purpose, that there is in Jones's house a door with a number of paint chips. Jones, desiring to be handy around the bouse, informs Mrs. Jones that he will sandpaper the chloped spots and retouch them with paint.

This would seem to call for 10 or 15 minutes of work, if there were any sandpaper in Jones's house. A 20 minute search discloses that there is not. Sandpaper, being a tool, obeys the laws of tools and never frequents houses where it may be put to work. In fact, all the sandpaper in Jones's neighborhood bas gothered at Johnson's house, which, because of an unusually splendid point job, will never have any psint chips

Jones goes to buy sandpaper. After telling the hardware salesman what he wants it for, the salesman prevalls upon him to purchase a power sander, and Jones goes bome with au intense sense of well-being, created by the knowledge that for once in his life he has the right tool for the job. Jones is in for a shock of course. A second law of tools requires that all tools in any given house must almost invarl. ably be wrong for any job that may arise. Thus, arriving home and dashing to bis chipped door. Jones makes a painful discovery. The power line on his sander is eight feet long and the closest electrical outlet is nine feet away from the paint chips.

This is not a simple case of bad luck for poor Jones. Not at all. It is a case of pure malice on the part of the tool. If, for example, the most remote paint chip on the door had been eight feet from the electric outlet, the rord oo Jones's sander would have shrunk to seven feet on the way home from the store.

Another trip to the hardware store results in purchase of a 23-loot extension cord of the heavy-duty variety: that is, it has a third prong for grounding. Back home, his entbusiasm for the job gone, Jones makes the inevitable discovery. All electrical outlets within 33 feet of the paint chips have only two

Jooes, who has been gaining wisdom about tools this afternoon, has anticipated this, however, and has bought a threeproog extension cord adapter. One simply plugs it into a two-prong receptacle, attaches a tiny clip under the tiny screw bolding the plate on the receptacle, plugs the three-prong extension cord into the adapter, and sands

Jones knows immediately. without even looking, that none of the screwdrivers in his house will be small enough to do this particular job. The law of tools forbids it. He is right, of course. The smallest screwdriver in Jones's house is so large that it seems to have been designed for dismantling steam locomotives.

Actually, all the neighborhood's tiny screwdrivers suitable for applying to tiny screws bolding plates on electric outlets are over at Smith's place across the street. They are the place, in fact, for at this very moment Smith is about to start dismantling a steam locomotive.

What is Jones's next step? The foolhardy will advise him to loosen the screw with a knife blade. Jooes probably sees this possibility, but he is becoming wise enough to know what will happen next. The sander, once put into operation, will be found to defile the air and carpet with immense quantities of dust. Jones will have to quit and go to the store for a dust catcher. On returning and resuming work, the sandpaper will break, After replacing it, a fuse will blow. While replacing the fuse. the baby will throw the sander down the steps. And so on.

The best thing for Jones to do, upon learning that the smallest screwdriver he has is suitable only for large-scale work, is to abandon the chipped-door project and tackle some large-scale work. The trick in dealing with tools is always to see what tools are in the bouse and then find a job that can be done with them, Jones, for example, might be able to get a very good price from Smith on a steam locomotive that needs dismantling.

The Great Barrier Reef starfish implicated in last year's plague.

By Shelby Coffey III and Richard Corrigan

WASHINGTON (WP).—In part, the list of events reported by the Center for Short-Lived Phenomena in 1969 reads like a cavalcade of old science-fictionhorror movie titles.

Last year there occurred—the St. Louis spider invasioo and the Miami snail infestation; the Great Barrier Reef starfish plague and the Amazon River porpoise disappearance; the Japanese bamboo kill and the Trinidad butterfly invasion.

Behind these superficially bumorous names is a deep seriousness of purpose and result. Established in December, 1967, the Center for Short-Lived Phenomena is, as one of its members puts it.
"a sort of scientific wire service." Designed in Washington and based in Cambridge, Mass., funded by the Smithsonian Institution and possessing access to a well-coordinated communications network, the center provides rapid reporting of short-lived natural events to scientists who may wish to investigate.

It also helps make arrangements for observers flying to the sites. (And, not unimportant, it sends out airmail postcards describing and noting the phe-nomena to over 2,000 correspondents and sobscribers in 120 countries.)

In slightly over two years of existence, the center has evoked well-bred scientific cheers from many quarters, stimulated a number of expeditions, made one embarrassing mistake, helped cut the loss of life in natural disasters, provided some clues in the growing pollution crises and brought one happy letter from a top Russian geophysicist.

One Smithsonian publication proclaims, a little grandly, that the center is "perhaps the ultimate in the communications age"-a scientific early warning system.

Keeping Up With Spiders, Bamboo, Sinking Islands

Given the gloomy predictions that some ecologists are making about environ-mental breakdowns in the near future, this aspect could have tangible results. If, as some historians claim, civilization has progressed in periods of much international contact, then the center and its founder, Dr. Sidney Galler, bave certainly been civilizing influences, (One piece of evidence—a letter of appreciation from the president of the Soviet Geophysical Committee, reading in part "... the various manifestations of activity on our planet ... often escaped the attention of scientists. Now this gap is being bridged by your cards . . . available to the Soviet community of specialists . . ")

The center was set up in late 1967 with a budget of around $50,000 a year. It is under the policy control of ths Smithsonian Scientific Committee (headed by Dr. Galler) and under the opera-tional control of a director (Robert

At the center itself, life seems to be a busy affair, punctuated by hectic moments, and spells of near-panic. Those panicky moments are generally the results of fireball sightings when the center shoots out calls or cablegrams in hopes of recovering the fallen fireballs.

At other times, even the center's speed is just not coough. When an island was reported to be floating around the Caribbean, the center flashed the word. The United States Navy prepared 2 helicopter. Expectant scientists waited in anticipation of a possible expedition. The unobliging island sank before any-one could reach it.

Then there was the unfortunate mis-take. A UPI report declared that what appeared to be a prehistoric sea monster had washed up on a Mexican beach. By the tims an expert had made his way to identify the remains of a whale, the center had already sent out a preliminary

On other occasions, however, the cen-ter's work has proved to be of some help in fostering that elusive phantom called "international goodwill" as well as scientific knowledge.

When the center flashed word of the Arenal volcanic eruption in Costa Rica, the president of the South American republic found out that the Americans were interested and telegraphed President Lyndon B. Johnson for belp, The Smithsonian had already dispatched several scientists who became, in effect, a U.S. government delegation.

By the time they arrived, the volcano was in its third day and had killed almost 80 people. An American scientist ventured into the area on foot with a Costa Rican geologist and trudged about for "six nervous hours." They found the crater and the American plotted the map showing the areas that would be struck if the volcano exploded again and turned the map over to the grateful

The future of the center has been a matter of some speculation. Some scientists have urged that the center delve more deeply into the environment crisis. Director Citron, however, feels the center should continue to serve as a catalyst by being a news disseminator, to stimulate interest and thought on a global Magician Leslie Dee, 40, is looking for a new rabbit so he can parade his prestidigital prowess on stage once more. The incumbent bunny, which he pulls from R supposedly empty top hat, has a weird fetish—eating the hat. "He is permanently nibbling at the props," said Dee. "And he comes out the wrong way in the middle of my tricks." It's a simple case of the rabbit biting the hat that feeds him.

Jean Christophe Mitterrand, eldest son of François Mitterrand, the leftist candidate in the 1965 French presidential elections, is in Israel to work on Kibbutz Kfar Hanassi in northern Galilee for a few months. The 23year-old history student said the majority of the French people support Israel "in their bearts" and object to their government's Middle East policy. His father, now an independent member of the Assemblée Nationale, is against the arms embargo and "supports the people of Israel," be said.

Britain's Film Censorship Board has raised the minimum age for persons permitted to attend "X" (adult: movies from 16 to 18 years in a move to safe-guard the morals of youth and possibly reduce the number of scenes of sex and violence that find their way to the cutting room floor. "By raising the age, said John Trevelyan, secretary of the board, "we have created a film category for adults." There has been a recent wave of spice of life movies. The Swedish sex movie, "I Am Curious (Yellow)", shed 20 palpitating minutes be-fore it was allowed to be shown in Britain.

Singer Tony Bennett will try to get a Mexican divorce from his wife Patricia in order to marry former actress Sandy Grant, 29, who gave birth to Bennett's child Priday, a sixpound girl they named Joanna. Miss Grant said from her room at Beth Israel Hospital, N.Y. that she's just concentrating on being a "typical mother." The Lecsville, La., woman has been going with the 43-year-old singer for the past four years. Bennett and his wife, who have two teenage sons, have been separated for six years. She has a pending divorce action against him, the second she has initiated. Bennett refused pub-lic comment on the divorce ac-
